Deer Park Hotel

DEER PARK, MD.
This famous hostelry on the superb plateau of the Allegheny Mountains known as the Glades, opened June 23, after a most complete renovation of the entire property, making it new throughout. The twelve private cottages were refurbished, and the thirty-third year of this beautiful mountain resort finds it more prepossessing and enjoyable than at any time in its history.

The popularity of Deer Park is due to its desirable altitude, 2,800 feet above the sea level, out of reach of malaria and mosquitoes; its magnificent parking of 500 acres of forest and lawn, and miles of perfectly kept roadways, affords most delightful surroundings.

It is thoroughly modern as to improvements and equipment, with Bowling Alleys, Billiard Rooms, Tennis Courts, Golf Links, Swimming Pools, Livery, etc., and the delightful rooms and excellent cuisine are not surpassed. No mountain resort equals it for accessibility.

Three through trains daily via the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. For rates in hotel, annexes or cottages or illustrated booklets and floor plans, apply to W. E. BURWELL, Mgr. Deer Park, Md. jly3,6,10,13,17,20,24,27,31.

Mrs. Monteith's Country Cousin

By EDITH M. DOANE
Copyright, 1906, by W. R. Caldwell

A little way beyond Sheffield the Pittsford express stopped in the open country.

Jack Austin leaned back in his seat in the drawing room car and gloomily viewed the discouraging vista of mud and driving easterly rain outside. He did not yearn for a week end in the wilds of New England in March, but Monteith's wife had set her heart upon celebrating her husband's birthday at their country house, so Austin, being wisely submitted to the inevitable.

Mrs. Monteith's note had not tended to brighten the prospect.

My little cousin from the country, Kittle Adams, will be there [the letter ran] and I shall depend upon you as Dick's friend to see that she enjoys herself, as this is her first experience in "society." Kate Reynolds, the western heiress, whom every one was wild about at Bar Harbor last summer, is back from Europe and will be here too. All the men are sure to be at her feet, and it is only because I know your aversion to the modern society belle that I dare ask you to look after Kittle. Cordially,

DORA MONTEITH.

He felt a horrible conviction that he could never stand three days of it, but if the worst came to worst he could be summoned back to New York by urgent business, and if he must be dragged at it. You would be surprised if I told you all I know about you."

"For example?"

"That you live in a small, but delightful country town."

"And?"

"That you are about to make your first plunge into that much overrated whirlpool—society."

"Oh," she said, "how can you tell it is wonderful?" She laughed again, subsiding on her chair in her merriment.

"If you'll let me sit down," he said, "I'll complete the picture."

While he spoke he had taken off his heavy ulster and thrown it over the back of the vacant chair beside her.

"I have heard of you from your cousin, Mrs. Monteith," he said gently. "She told me how difficult it was to get you away from Hilldale even for Dick's birthday. Now, that it all wrong. The thought of all this loveliness wasting unappreciated in Hilldale lent added fervor to his voice. "You are bound to have a jolly time at the Monteiths."

"But it will be so different—from Hilldale. So many people." Something perilously close to a smile touched her lips.

"You will soon grow accustomed to all that," tranquilly.

"Think how nervous I shall be before I do. The introductions—the first dinners."

"But I am to take you in to dinner," he returned contentedly. Truly the fates had been exceedingly kind.

She glanced at him swiftly. "How do you know?"

"Mrs. Monteith promised."

"Sure you won't regret it?"

He eyed her reproachfully, and she laughed again.

"Do you know the rest of the party?"

He mentioned what names he knew. "And the new western heiress," he added.

"Who is she?"

"Miss Reynolds. I doubt if you will care for her. She has had a lot of attention, and I dare say her head has been turned by it."

"Oh!"

"I never saw a beautiful heiress yet who was not spoiled," he said tranquilly.

The girl flushed and bit her lip.

Their conversation became so engrossing that when at last the train after much wheezing protest began slowly to move they scarcely noticed it until the brakeman opened the door.

"Next station Lenox," he bawled.

As the train slackened speed Austin helped her into her fur coat, threw on his own coat with a jerk, seized her possessions and his and helped her out on the wet platform, where a carriage was waiting.

The drive was not a long one, and the carriage soon stopped before a rambling stone house. At the sound of the wheels the door flew open and Mrs. Monteith peered out into the darkness. The carriage lamp shone on the faces of the arrivals.

"Oh, Dick, it's Jack Austin, and Kate Reynolds is with him," she cried.

Later, as Miss Reynolds was about to go to her room, Jack Austin stopped her at the foot of the wide staircase.

"I owe you a humiliating explanation," he began.

"You do, but I will spare you," she smiled, holding out her hand in friendly fashion.

She did not despise him, then, for being such a sublime idiot. He flushed with happiness.

On the second stair she turned to him again. Her eyes danced with mischief.

"Remember you promised to take me to dinner!"

Mrs. Monteith glanced at them, then looked ruefully toward a tall lean girl standing awkwardly on the hearth rug.

"Poor Kitty!" she sighed.

Animal Appetites.

The dog, the bear and the monkey eat the greatest variety of food. The dog so thoroughly the companion of man that, while he has preferences, he will eat almost anything that his master eats and therefore may be said to be omnivorous as man. On a level with the dog and possibly surpassing him in this regard, the bear subsists on a very varied diet. The ursine, or bear tribe, appears to be capable of sustaining existence upon a purely animal or purely vegetable diet or to be carnivorous or vegetarian at will.

They will contentedly feed and thrive on fruit, honey, nuts, snails, roots and other similar articles of diet and rarely attack the higher animals except when driven by privation. The grizzly bear and the polar bear are great flesh eaters, but in summer the former feeds largely on acorns, and the latter, eats grass greedily. Their teeth, like those of human beings, are suitable for a mixed diet. Then have the sharp cutting or pointed tooth of the carnivora and the flat, grinding tooth of the herbivora.

Willing to Compromise.

The mother had been having a strenuous day with her offspring, as Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer tells the story of a little cousin of hers. The small boy had even more than usually been a peripatetic interrogation point. There were few things concerning the construction of the world and all in it, with asides upon vices and virtues, which the mother neglected to answer. She was welcomed the night before last by her little son and pressed to bed. But he had not finished his questions.

"Mamma," he asked, "what is a soul?"

"Now, dear," replied the weary mother, "I am very tired, and I never answer another question tonight."

"Well, then, you needn't answer," said the child, "tonight," said the child, "but put your finger on the nose of the New York Times."

MANHATTAN STREETS.

They Have Names With Reason Names Without Reason.

Manhattan Island has displayed little system in naming its streets. They have names with reason without reason, and in most cases where there have been reasons march of improvement and lapse memory have nearly buried them of sight.

Great Broadway, the largest commercial thoroughfare in the world, a good reason for its name, though it city now has broader ways, but in the early days of New Amsterdam it was the broadest of them all and the most important, leading as it did through the length of the island and into the far country of the north. Then Broad street was quite properly so called, for it is broader than Broadway, though quite insignificant in length, being formed somewhat like the Dutchman who laid it out.

You may well wonder why Beaver street is so called, for there is no evidence of the beaver there, as there was when it was named. It was once only a beaver path leading to a swamp now covered by Exchange place. And Exchange place suggests its baptism, for on the bank of that swamp the early settlers met for barter, and afterward on that site were erected houses for exchange and sale which have been continued to this day.

So it is with Wall street, a little farther north. The wall erected for protection in 1653 by the Dutch, who feared a foray of New Englanders, long ago disappeared, but the name remains not only to designate the street, but to describe matters financial.

Again, farther north, we find no reason for Maiden lane. The maidens who made the path on their journey back and forth with laundry from the stream that flowed where Gold street now is have long ago been forgotten, but their memories have been preserved in the name of the street. And Gold street? There never was gold there, but the street did run along the foot of an elevation known as "Golden hill" because of the profusion of yellow wild flowers that crowned it in the spring.

Then there is Bowling Green. There is nothing present to suggest the name, but there was a little more than 200 years ago, when Hans and Fritz played bowls there and called it "Bowling Green." Close by is Battery place, with no indication of a battery or thirty-two pounders, excepting the openings yet remaining in the Aquarium. Go on up to Canal street, and you will find no canal other than a huge sewer under the street paving that marks where once was a canal that drained Collect pond, on the site of the Tombs, through a treacherous swamp into the North river.

There was a bit of poetry and sentiment in the old names and their associations. Soon these were mostly dropped, a little sentiment being preserved in streets named after individuals, suggested by Hudson, Astor, Roosevelt, Clark, Franklin, Fulton, Clinton, Cooper and so on. Though "Moore" is right, it was mistaken for a person's name, it was originally Moor, then a mooring place.

Then came the entirely prosaic age, when streets were numbered and laid out, beginning in an arbitrary fashion. First street is not first any place, excepting the first north of Houston street, being a mile and a half from the Battery, where it might have been with some reason, so with First avenue and Avenue A.—New York Herald.

HEALTHY MOTHERS.

Mothers should always keep in good bodily health. They owe it to their children. Yet it is no unusual sight to see a mother, with babe in arms, coughing violently and exhibiting all the symptoms of a consumptive tendency. And why should this dangerous condition exist, dangerous alike to mother and child, would put a stop to it at once? No and tried remedy in the house—for its timely use will promptly cure any lung, throat or bronchial trouble in herself or her children. The worst cough or cold can be speedily cured by German Syrup; so can hoarseness and congestion of the bronchial tubes. It makes expectoration easy, and gives instant relief and refreshing rest to the coughed and consumptive. New trial bottles, 25c; large size, 75c. For sale by F. G. Bland, Druggist.

Devising and Installing Systems Contracts for Keeping Sets of Books for Corporations, Partnership Concerns, Officers of Clubs and Private Individuals.

I am now prepared to take care of all special work pertaining to Auditing, Accounting, Opening and Closing Sets of Books, and Devising and Installing Systems. You can more readily negotiate capital for your enterprises through an Accountant than a Broker. Circularizing will not do today; personal solicitation is the only sure way. I have an especial clientele of capitalists throughout the section and Eastern States, where my profession as an Accountant for the past few years has brought me into touch with the wealth of these sections, and I have associates who will assist me in presenting your proposition in person. Few investors will entertain a proposition without a figured statement can be shown, illustrating actual or prospective profits, drawn up by an independent Accountant of repute, and this is the basis of any successful flotation. I have also engaged an expert stenographer to attend to the public wants along the line of stenographic work.
